The Francis Family.

THE family which is the subject of the following sketch, resided for six generations in Wethersfield, Connecticut, and Newington, which was once a part of the first-named town, and they were substantial, influential and well-to-do members of the community. In each generation they figured in the history of the town, both in church and civil affairs, as appears from the town records of Wethersfield and from the church records of both Wethersfield and Newington.

The study of the records of this family has proved very interesting and very satisfactory. Throughout the whole line they have been found to be stable, earnest men and women, identified with the best interests of the communities in which they lived, as well in church as in civil affairs, and a study of their lives has shown them to possess the characteristics of charity, benevolence and courtesy in a marked degree. There have been among them clergymen, lawyers, physicians, engineers, merchants, bankers, manufacturers and farmers, and some of them have attained the highest success in their several vocations, while all, so far as have been found, have been in easy circumstances and maintained their families in the usual amount of comfort. If there have been failures they have not come to light.
